LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

The Liberator.

The letter is addressed to the Liberator, a newspaper that published abolitionist views. The letter discusses the significance of the abolitionist movement and the importance of continued efforts in the fight against slavery. The author emphasizes the need for persistence and the belief that the struggle against slavery will eventually be victorious.

The text is written in a formal tone, typical of 19th-century correspondence, and uses the first-person pronoun to express the writer's personal perspective and dedication to the cause of abolition.

Poetry

It is a strange thing for a man to assume the title and office of a poet, and without having the qualifications of one, and it is all the more strange to see a man succeed in the poetry that he has assumed. The poet is a man of many talents, and it is a strange thing that he should have succeeded in the poetry that he has assumed. The poet is a man of many talents, and it is a strange thing that he should have succeeded in the poetry that he has assumed. LITERARY.

For the Liberation.

WILLIAM HENRY ALMOND.

You tell me to keep sweet, but, my friend,
They are bows which no language can ever pluck;
Perhaps you may feel thus, but you are quite mistaken.
He knows you who are not yet come by it.
Go, ask of the highest the height of his pleasure,
As he declares on his head, though at distance restrained.
You tell me that poor souls are the brightest treasure,
For the strength of the hills we bleed then,
Our God, our father's God !
For the strength of the hills we bleed then,
Our God, our father's God !

The sufferings of the children.

Far, far below we serve,
The war-borne of the spacious
Cannot reach our lofty soul, and
Thy dark clouds wade the threshold
Of freedom's last stride.
For the strength of the hills we bleed then,
Our God, our father's God !
For the strength of the hills we bleed then,
Our God, our father's God !

When Duxeldra first marched towards Warsaw, he had at the head of 120,000 men, out of the Russian army. On the 20th of February, the Russian army, formed by hundreds of thousands of men, took possession of Moscow, and had marched towards Warsaw, which they had reached by the 4th of April. The troops were divided into two parts, and fought for two days running in possession of the city, which improved its situation, and increased the army's morale. The Russians were superior in numbers, and the French had to withdraw.

A Paris correspondent of the London Times reports a letter from a gentleman in June, stating positively, that Duxeldra had reached Moscow. The French army is divided into the following divisions: 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 31st. The total strength of the French army is estimated at 750,000 men. The French have been unsuccessfully elected, by the Treaty of Taffleton, to the office of President of the Republic and of Manual Philoso-phy in that institution.

The German statesmen state that the Rev. A. H. M. S. is to be restored to his former position, and that the minority has been unnecessarily elected, by the Treaty of Taffleton, to the office of President of the Republic and of Manual Philoso-phy in that institution.
