MINOR OF COLOR AFFAIR.

In our 181st number, we mentioned the following incident, which has recently been published by James M. Manly, Esq., and presented some minute and interesting narrative of the facts. It is not our intention to follow up any special occasion in this case, but merely to narrate the facts. The case is of the utmost importance, and deserves to be known.

The individual in question was a colored man, about 40 years of age, and had been living in the United States for many years. He was employed as a laborer in a factory, and had always been a faithful and honest workman. He had married a colored woman, about 25 years of age, and had two children by her. The family lived in a small apartment in the factory, and were supported by the man's wages.

The man had always been respected by his fellow-workmen, and had never been in conflict with the management of the factory. But one day, while at work, he was accused of stealing some materials from the factory. The factory had been in a state of business, and the management was in a state of irritation. The man was accused, and was summoned before the authorities.

The trial was held in the presence of a large crowd of people. The man was examined on the stand, and was compelled to admit the theft. The case was submitted to the jury, and they found him guilty of theft. The man was sentenced to imprisonment for one year, and was immediately removed from the factory.

The man was greatly shocked by the verdict, and was unable to understand how he could have been guilty of such a crime. He was in a state of despair, and could not see how he could ever be released from prison. He was taken to the factory, and was placed in the same cell with the other convicts.

The man was not allowed to leave the prison, and was not permitted to work. He was kept in a state of misery and destitution. He was not allowed to see his family, and was not permitted to communicate with the outside world. He was kept in a state of despair, and was unable to understand how he could ever be released from prison.
