For the Liberator.

Mr. Secretary—A gentleman from the city of Philadelphia came to me yesterday morning with the following interesting account which occurred among the passengers on board a premium boat on the Delaware river this morning, to the effect that the boat was in a very bad state of repair, and that the passengers were in great danger of being thrown overboard. The gentleman also stated that he had heard the crew of the boat exclaim, "If we don't sink, we'll all be killed." I am sorry to say that I cannot verify the statement, but I trust that the passengers were not thrown overboard, and that they arrived at their destination safely.

A LOOKER-ON.

New-York, May 13, 1859.

To the Editor of the Times:

A few days since, being closet, as is my custom, in my study, with my dog, whom I have lately purchased, and who has a most amiable disposition, I was reading a book, and was about to turn over a page, when my dog, in a mostneighborly manner, put his head upon my knee, and said, "Read on, man, read on." I did, and found the page very interesting. The book was a work on the life and works of the great German poet, Goethe.

Yours truly,

A. S. B.

BRAHMS.

Saturday, June 5, 1859.

The music of Brahms is the most original and profound that has ever been written for the piano. The composer is a great master of harmony, and his works are characterized by a rich and tender expression of feeling. His style is full of pathos and pathos, and his melodies are full of pathos and pathos. The music of Brahms is a revelation of the human soul, and his works are a revelation of the human soul. The music of Brahms is a revelation of the human soul, and his works are a revelation of the human soul.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

ADDRESS TO THE PETITCOAT ASSOCIATION.

My Fair Lady,—I am sorry that I cannot answer your letter. I am not in the habit of corresponding with women, and I have no time to do so. If you will write to me at your own convenience, I shall be glad to hear from you.

Mrs. R.

ON BEING A MOTHER.

BY J. H. PHELPS, M.D.

There are few duties more important or more pressing than that of the mothers. They are the first and most influential of the several who have the care of the young and the education of the child. The mother is the nurse of the child, the teacher of the young, and the guide of the adolescent. She is the first and the most important of the teachers, the most constant, the most intimate, and the most continuous. She is the first and the most important of the educators, the most constant, the most intimate, and the most continuous. She is the first and the most important of the guardians, the most constant, the most intimate, and the most continuous. She is the first and the most important of the protectors, the most constant, the most intimate, and the most continuous. She is the first and the most important of the friends, the most constant, the most intimate, and the most continuous.
