LETTERS ON SLAVERY.

MR. THOMAS HAWKINS, Member of the Legislature, Augusta Co., Va.

ST. JOHN BARKIN.

Editor of the Telegraph, at Richmond, Va.

A letter written by Mr. Thomas Hawkins, a member of the Legislature of Augusta County, Virginia, to Mr. St. John Barkin, editor of the Telegraph, in Richmond, Virginia. The letter discusses the issue of slavery and its abolition. It was published in the newspaper The Liberator, Vol. 22, No. 40, on August 22, 1852, in Boston, Massachusetts. The letter emphasizes the moral and ethical aspects of slavery, and argues for the immediate abolition of the institution. It appeals to readers based on the principles of justice, humanity, and the inherent equality of all people. The author expresses concern about the suffering of enslaved individuals and the moral consequences of maintaining the institution of slavery. The letter concludes with a call to action, urging readers to consider the arguments presented and to support the cause of abolition.

The letter is part of a larger body of work that sought to educate and mobilize public opinion against slavery. The Liberator, founded by William Lloyd Garrison, was a prominent abolitionist newspaper that played a significant role in the abolitionist movement. The newspaper published writings that advocated for the immediate and complete abolition of slavery, and featured articles and letters that addressed the practical and ethical dimensions of the issue. The Liberator's advocacy contributed to the growing momentum for abolition and the eventual abolition of slavery in the United States.
THE LIBERATOR

THE MOST ABANDONED GAS.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you.

Mrs. Darwin—Is this the manner in which you have received the news of the passing of your father, and do you think that this is the manner in which you are to receive the news of your death? I must add that I think you should be glad to have your death come to you. 