LITERARY, MISCELLANEOUS, AND MORAL.

LITERARY.

LITERARY NEWSPAPER.

ACRE IN JAMAICA.

The following was a letter written by a lady who has lately visited the West Indies.

A lady, who has long been a friend of mine, and who is known to be a woman of great refinement and education, has just returned from a visit to Jamaica. She has been there for several months, and has seen much of the island, and has been much impressed by the beauty of its scenery, and the charm of its climate.

The climate of Jamaica is mild and equable, and the air is always fresh and invigorating. The black soil is fertile, and the crops are abundant. The hills are covered with forest trees, and the valleys with orchards and vineyards. The people are industrious, and the country is prosperous.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE LITURGICAL ANNUAL.

On reading the letter to the Editor, in which he speaks of his experience in the West Indies, I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

TO THE REVEREND FRANCIS BACON.

I was much interested in the letter which you wrote to the Editor, and I am sure that your views of the prospects of the country are well-founded. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE LITURGICAL ANNUAL.

On reading the letter to the Editor, in which he speaks of his experience in the West Indies, I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE LITURGICAL ANNUAL.

On reading the letter to the Editor, in which he speaks of his experience in the West Indies, I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the same lady to a friend in Europe.

I am much interested in the prospects of the country, and I am sure that it will become a great centre of commerce and industry. The government is capable and efficient, and the people are contented and tractable.