LITERARY.

From the London Literary Gazette. GIP WALTER SCOTT. SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Our sky has lost another star,

The earth has claimed its own,
And into dread eternity
A glocious one is going.

He who could give departed things
So much of light and breath,
He is himself now with the past—
Gone forth from life to death.

That has no mouran near that has no mouran near;
The meanest turf the wild flow
Has some familiar tear.;
But kindred sorrow is forgot.
Amid the general gloom;
Grief is religion feld for him
Whose temple is his tomb.

Thou of the future and the past,
How shall we honor thee?
Shall we build up a pyramid
Amid the pathless sea? Amid the pathless sea?

Shall we bring red gold from the east,

And marble from the west, And marble from the west,
And carved porphyry, that the fane
Be worthy of its guest?

De worthy or its guess?

Or shall we seek thy native land,
And choose some naciset hill,
To be thy state, firely wrought
With all the scalptor's skill?

Methinks, as there are common signs
To every common we,
That we should do some night thing
To mark who lies below.

But this folly: thou need'st not
The scolpture or the shrine;
The heart is the sole monument
For memories like thine.
The pyramids in Egypt rore *
To mark some monarch's fame;
Imperishable is the tomb,
But what the founder's name?

But what the ionneer's name?
Small need for tibute unto thee,
To let the fancy roam—
To thee, who hask by many a hearth
An altar and a home;
Each little bookshelf where thy works
Are carefully enshrined,
There is thy tophy, there is left
Thy beritage of mind.

How many such delightful hours
Rise on our saddened mood,
When we have owed to thee and thine.
The charm of solitude! How eagerly we caught the book!

How earnestly we read!

How actual seemed the living scenes Thy vivid colors spread !

And not to an dominion lound Has been thy varied power; In many a distant scane enjoyad-in meny a distant hour, In childhood turning from it play, In manhood, youth, and age, All bent beneath the enchanter's wand, All owned that spell—thy page.

All owned that spoil—iny page.

Read by the glimmering firelight,
In the greenwood alone,
Amid the gathered circle—who
But hash thy magic known ?
Laid in the cottage window sent,
Fanned by the open air,
Left by the palette and the desk,
Thou hast thy readers there.

Thou hast thy readers there.

Actual as friends we know and love,
The beings of thy mind
Are, like events of reel life,
In memory anathrined:
We seem as if we heard their voice,
As if we knew their face—
Familiar with their insward thoughts,
Their beauty and their grace.

As if bound on a pilgrimage,
We visit now thy shore,
Haunted by all which thou bast gleaned
Frop the old days of yore:
We feel in every hill and beath
Rømance which thou has flung;
We say, "I'was kiere the poet dwell,
"Twas there of which he sung.

Remembering thee, we half forget How vainly this is said; There seemed so much of life in thee, We cannot think thee dead. Dead? dead? when there is on this earth. Such wate of workless breath; There should have gone a thousand lives To ranson thee from death?

Now out on it! to hear them speak
Their idle words and vain,
As if it were a common loss
For spatter to sustein.
It is an awful vacancy
A great man leaves behind,
And solemnly should sorrow fall
Upon bereaved mankind.

Upon becaver makind.

We have too little gratinde
Within this selfish heart,
Else with what anguish should we see
The great and good depart!
Methicks our dark and sinful earth
Might dread an evil day,
When Heaven, in pily or in wrath,
Calls its beloved away.

And fear and awe are on my soul, And fear and awe are on my som,
To look upon the tomb,
And think of who are sleeping laid Within its midnight glo What glorious ones are gone !—thus light Doth vanish from our shores; Out on the vanity of words! Peace now, for thoughts and tears ! L-E. L. MISCELLANEOUS.

In looking over the proceedings of the Georgia legislators, we were strate, with the following, among the notices of bills brought in:

Mr. Haynes—An act declaring it a high misdemeanor for any Attorney, Solicitor of Conjael-lor to appear in any court in this State, in behalf of any Cherokee Indian, or rother consequence of the control of the territory in the occupancy of the Cherokee Indians, or who shall make any motion, or income of the State of the Supreme Court in the case of Worcester and Butler against the State of Georgia—and to provide for the punshment of the same.
