Our country is the world—our countrymen, all mankind.

The guilt of this Nation, as a whole, is so palpable, that it is the duty of every worthy nation, in self-defense, to say, 'We cannot be responsible for the crimes of others.'

The American Republic has its birth in American freedom. It was not born of the blood of its own people, but of the blood of its own enemies. It was not born of the labor of its own people, but of the labor of its own masters. It was not born of the love of its own people, but of the love of its own masters. It was not born of the wisdom of its own people, but of the wisdom of its own masters. It was not born of the peace of its own people, but of the peace of its own masters. It was not born of the prosperity of its own people, but of the prosperity of its own masters. It was not born of the happiness of its own people, but of the happiness of its own masters. It was not born of the glory of its own people, but of the glory of its own masters.
