LITERARY, MISCELLANEOUS AND MORAL.

A GOOD WIFE.

From a German Novel, translated by the late Dr. C. H. Littledale.

1. A good wife possesses a large share of what is called "common sense." She must know how to save her husband's money. She must know how to make the best of every article she possesses, and how to make every single penny count. She must be able to keep a penny in the bank and a shilling in the house. She must be able to understand the workings of a household, and to conduct it without any expense. She must be able to manage the servants, and to keep them in order. She must be able to understand the mysteries of household economy, and to manage the household affairs with the greatest care and attention. She must be able to understand the workings of a household, and to conduct it without any expense. She must be able to manage the servants, and to keep them in order. She must be able to understand the mysteries of household economy, and to manage the household affairs with the greatest care and attention.

2. A good wife must be distinguished from a bad one, in virtue of her great share of "common sense." She must be a woman of great prudence, and a woman of great sagacity. She must be able to understand the workings of a household, and to conduct it without any expense. She must be able to manage the servants, and to keep them in order. She must be able to understand the mysteries of household economy, and to manage the household affairs with the greatest care and attention. She must be able to understand the workings of a household, and to conduct it without any expense. She must be able to manage the servants, and to keep them in order. She must be able to understand the mysteries of household economy, and to manage the household affairs with the greatest care and attention.

3. A good wife is always the hero of her family. She is the first person in her family. She is the first person to whom her husband looks for advice. She is the first person to whom he confides his secrets. She is the first person to whom he lays his plans. She is the first person to whom he refers his troubles. She is the first person to whom he refers his sorrows. She is the first person to whom he refers his hopes. She is the first person to whom he refers his joys. She is the first person to whom he refers his successes. She is the first person to whom he refers his failures. She is the first person to whom he refers his hopes. She is the first person to whom he refers his joys. She is the first person to whom he refers his successes. She is the first person to whom he refers his failures.

4. A good wife is the best of women. She is the best of the human family. She is the best of the human family. She is the best of the human family. She is the best of the human family. She is the best of the human family.

5. A good wife is the best of women. She is the best of the human family. She is the best of the human family. She is the best of the human family. She is the best of the human family. She is the best of the human family.
