THE LIBERATOR.

VOL. VI.

OUR COUNTRY IS THE WORLD—OUR COUNTRYMEN ARE ALL MADE.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27, 1859.

NO. 38.

THE LIBERATOR

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.

THE LIBERATOR.

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.

THE LIBERATOR.

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.

THE LIBERATOR.

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.

THE LIBERATOR.

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.

THE LIBERATOR.

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.

THE LIBERATOR.

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.

THE LIBERATOR.

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.

THE LIBERATOR.

Published Weekly at No. 75, Washington Street, Boston.

W. L. GARRISON, Editor.

ENGRAVING FROM THE LONDON TIMES, JUNE 1, 1859.

MR. THOMPSON IN LONDON.

Yesterday an adjourned meeting was held at the Institute of London for the abolition of slavery, which was very successful. As before, Mr. William Cargill, was the speaker, beginning with the single theme, that slavery has been so prolonged as to have become a matter of course, and that abolition societies have been so persistently resisted that they have become a matter of necessity. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world was involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it. He then proceeded to show that the cause of the future of the world is involved in the true-hearted, manly, and firm abolition of slavery. He then told the meeting that the question of slavery is so connected with the future of the world that it is impossible to be silent about it.