THE LIBERATOR.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

The Liberator is published weekly at the cost of $1.50 per annum.

Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Editor.

The following is a description of the property purchased by the Liberator from the estate of its late founder, William Lloyd Garrison. The property consists of the building in which the Liberator is published, and all the books, pamphlets, and other materials contained therein, which are owned by the Liberator, and which were formerly owned by William Lloyd Garrison. The property is valued at $5000, and the Liberator has paid $1000 in cash for it. The balance of the purchase price is to be paid in ten equal installments, the first of which is due on the first day of January, 1838.

The Liberator is a monthly magazine, published at the cost of $1.00 per annum.

The people triumphant.

The negroes in the north have been passing through a trial in the late anti-slavery struggle, which is now over. The result of this struggle has been to settle the question of the negroes' rights and the value of their labor. The negroes have been treated as equals in the law, and their labor has been considered as valuable as that of any other race.

The negroes have been allowed to vote and hold office, and they have been given the same rights as the whites. The negroes have been allowed to own property and to enter into contracts. They have been given the right to education and to attend colleges and universities. The negroes have been given the right to travel and to live anywhere they choose. They have been given the right to vote and to hold office.

The negroes have been given the right to be treated as equals in all respects. They have been given the right to be treated with respect and consideration. They have been given the right to be treated with kindness and sympathy. They have been given the right to be treated with justice and equality.
