dopted the principles of Peace in their full extent.

Not for a single Pleiad, Whose light can ne'er retarn, But for a constellation, A cluster bright, we mourn.

Their's were no meteor flashes
Of evanescent light,
But sore unwavering bescons,
To guide to Truth and Right

Some fell while in the zenith Of mauhood's mighty power; Some, in the declination Of age's twifight hour.

Now tranquilly resplendent, tent in his evening radiance

As in his morning gleam.

While suns of rich effulgence Are blotted from the sky, in telescopic vision, New wonders meet the eye. By God's almighty flat,
New worlds to light have spr
And, with their wonted splendor
The evening skies are hung.

So other sons are given, To light our moral skies, And, in our darkened heaves New constellations rise.

Or, as in carnal warfare,
When some loved chieftan falls,
Fame's voice on other heroes,
To fill his station, calls.

So many a Boanerges
To battle hastens on,
O'er opposition's surges,
By their example borne

But not in mailed armor.

Not to the field of Death.

Salvation's hope their belinet,

Their breast-plate Love and Faith

Not with earth's carnal weapons,
Those champions of the slave,
Stood forth for Right and Freedon
To succor and to save.

What though their awords were plot
And pruning-books their spears,
Their's was a moral courage,
That knew no selfish fears,

That knew no sensor years.
Their glorious course thos finished,
Thus having 'kept the fath,'
Hope gave her how of promise
To spon the gates of Death.

Then onward, valuants, onward,
Complete the work begun,
Press closely on their footsteps,
And victory is won.
