SLAVERY

By the respected and interesting contributor to the "New York Evening Post," we hear the following result of a visit to the South, accompanied by a noted statesman, the Hon. Wm. Seward:

"Having visited the Southern States, I have been struck with the fact that the slavery question is not as acute as it is painted by those who wish to see the Union broken up. The planters are well contented with their system of labor, and believe it will continue to be so. They will not consent to pay higher wages to their negroes, for they say they are not worth it. They do not wish to employ white labor, as they believe it would be more expensive. They are satisfied with the system of slavery, and do not see any reason for changing it."

WHO ARE INTESTED HOUSES?

"The term "inverted house" is applied to the system of government in the Southern States, where the negroes are the ruling class. It is a system of government in which the negroes are the rulers, and the whites are the subjects. The negroes are the masters, and the whites are the slaves."

WHO INVENTED THE INVERTED HOUSE?

"There have been many inventors of the inverted house, but the most famous was John Brown, who is said to have invented it in 1856."
