MR. LINCOLN'S FRENCH TREATIES.

[article content]

OUR PEACE TROUBLES.

Mr. Lincoln's French treaties, which he has lately been negotiating, have been rendered much more difficult by the fact that the French government has not yet decided on the question of whether or not to enter into a treaty with the United States. The French minister at Washington has expressed his willingness to enter into negotiations, but the French government has not yet given a positive answer. The American minister at Paris, Mr. Seward, has been very active in the negotiations, and has succeeded in obtaining some favorable terms for the United States. But the French government has not yet decided on the question of whether or not to enter into a treaty with the United States.
