HARD FATE OF POOR ELLEN.

The weary day had sonk to test;
Nature lay hushed in soft repose;
Evening rolled on, in sable vest.
The moon in dewy stillness rose.

fleent, I sat in musing mood, Reflecting on frail life's short date; among mankind how few were good For wealth, what strife and fierce de A despiritum sigh fell on my car;
A slow step lingered at my door:
Leried, 'Comb in,—you need not fear,
To a lone female, and and poor.

To a lone female, and and poor.
She said she'd labored theirty sheers,
In service toil had spent her prime,
Through grief and care, and sweat shi
To save against a needy time.
Of comforts, she herself denied,—
Hoping, in time, to have a home;
All her hard carnings laid saide,
At length, the joyful time had come

A house and home were now her own;
By honest industry 'twas reared;
She dreamed of happiness alone—
She knew no focs, no freitd she feare-

But, too secure, in qvil hour
The wily snare for het was laid;
Her absence gave it legal power—
Her home was seized, and she betrayed! nome was seized, and alse betra Poor colored Ellen! now bereft Of all on earth she called her ⊮n; Nought but her honest nizar is left To struggle in her grief alone.

To struggle in her grief alone.
Where is the man, ceuld be so base
Against the helpless and forlorn
Let him, forever, hide his face,
If he would shun deserted scorn.

Bweet sympathy! O, shed one tear!
Humanity! pray lend your sid;
And, if you're not rewarded here,
In heaven you will be over paid.

For the Liberato THE BEREAVED FATHER THE BEREAVED PATHER.

By the Günberdand river I vilently striyed,
As the sun in the West was descending,
And there o're its waters a deep solemu shade,
From the shrubbery which o're it was bending.
I watched its bright waters as calmly they flowed
I method its bright waters as calmly they flowed
And thought of the God who in merey bestowed
Such senses to awaken devention:—

Whose voice rose distinct were the water; Not knowing that a to Jesus was nigh, He grieved for the lines of his daughter. That daughter the pride of his youth and his year. Per whom he had braved every danger, Was hurried wany midds her cries and her tears, To labor and toil for a stranger.

And think you no sympathy dwelt in that breast,
Think you he'd no father's affection?
Then list to his prayer, in sorrow expressed,
To God for his daughter's protection.

O God! protect my child,
My sweet, my lovely Rose;
Who on me oft has smiled,
And softened all my woes;
Keep, keep her from a tyrant's rod,
By which her mother died, O God!

By which her mother died, O God!

"Twas when my dear companion died,
I thought twould take my life
To leave my child without a guide,
And me wishout a wife;
And now the last remaining prop
Has gone, which stayed my spirit up.

Has gone, which has, a state,
O Lord! I'm left alone, a state,
No one to weep with me
Around my lored companion's grave:
My daughter—where is she? Around my loved companion's gra My daughter—where is she? 'Neath Alabama's burning sun Her servile race will soon be run.

'They say she's in a levely town,
But not to black man's eyes,
