From a letter to the Editors of the London Morning Chronicle, July 6, 1851.

The American public is greatly interested in the welfare of the slave in the Southern United States. The President of the United States, Mr. Lincoln, has recently addressed a message to the Senate and House of Representatives, in which he expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Secretary of State, London, July 6, 1851.

There are reasons to believe that the prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the New York Times, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the London Times, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the New York Daily Tribune, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the London Daily News, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the New York Herald, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the London Daily Telegraph, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the New York Courier and Enquirer, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the London Daily Mail, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the New York Sun, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the London Daily News, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the New York Herald, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the London Daily Telegraph, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.

From a letter to the Editor of the New York Courier and Enquirer, July 6, 1851.

The prevailing feeling of good will and understanding between the two countries will continue to exist. The President of the United States has recently expressed his hope that the feeling of friendship and goodwill which now exists between the two countries would continue to prevail. He also urged the necessity of a general understanding and agreement between the two nations, for the benefit of both. The President's message was well received, and has been widely discussed in the press.