THE LIBERATOR.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1838.

WILLIAM L. CHITTENDEN, Editor.

Washington Correspondence.

Letters from North and South, October 20, 1838.

We are now in the middle of the annual session of Congress, and through such has been a great deal of discussion and disagreeableness in the Senate, and of legislation. The Senate has been occupied with several items of business, and has passed several bills, including the reduction of the national debt, the establishment of the post office, the reorganization of the army, and the establishment of a national bank. The House of Representatives has been occupied with the consideration of the budget, and has also passed several bills, including the establishment of a national university, the reorganization of the navy, and the establishment of a national board of health. The bills have been debated and amended, and have been passed by both houses in the usual manner.

State Legislation.

The legislature of New York has been in session, and has passed several important bills. The bill for the education of the blind has been passed, and has been approved by the governor. The bill for the establishment of a national university has been passed, and has been approved by the governor. The bill for the establishment of a national board of health has been passed, and has been approved by the governor. The bill for the reduction of the national debt has been passed, and has been approved by the governor. The bill for the reorganization of the army has been passed, and has been approved by the governor. The bill for the reorganization of the navy has been passed, and has been approved by the governor. The bill for the establishment of a national bank has been passed, and has been approved by the governor. The bills have been debated and amended, and have been passed by both houses in the usual manner.

The Great Question.

It is evident that the great question before Congress is the reduction of the national debt. The national debt has been a burden for many years, and it is high time that it was reduced. The reduction of the national debt will be a great relief to the people of the United States, and will be a great benefit to the country. The reduction of the national debt will also be a great benefit to the government, and will be a great advantage to the country. The reduction of the national debt will also be a great benefit to the people of the United States, and will be a great advantage to the country. The reduction of the national debt will also be a great benefit to the government, and will be a great advantage to the country.

The Issue of the War.

The issue of the war is the question of slavery. The question of slavery is a matter of great importance, and it is high time that it was settled.
