bears on her deck, no weapons of war, n her hold, no stores of thunder; r barrels are charged with no powder, but if Yhich shall make all Christendom wender-Which shall make all Christendom wender—
The powder that Kindles on diam, via thore's;
That burns, but not to desirey:
That wells in the beaut of gratitide warm,
And explodes in a shout of joy—
The powder of grin, the floor of corn,
That life to the dying results;
And her hold, it is alored with lower of freed,
In the piace of bounds and balls.

'hose balls, discharged upon Erin's soil, Shall tears of rejoicing start; Those bombs, when breaking in cot of mud, Shall reach to the owner's heart.

Then speed her onward, thou western bree Through the foaming waves of ocean; And that banner, streaming in Eria's sky, Shall awaken her heart's devotion. Its stare shall break through the gloom, that han Like a pall, from pole to pole; Illumine the glazing eye of death, And cheer the departing soul.

By their light, the mother shall find her child To her bosom more closely prest; And a deep thanksgiving go up on high From her joy-o'erflowing breast.

Huzza! huzza! for the ship of war, Thus freighted with means of life; That wages no war, but the war of love And knows, but of kindness, no strife

Teach them the nobler warfare, waged By their brothers across the water, The nobler chivalry, rising there, Than that of blood and slaughter.

Than that of blood and singular.
Tell them a use is found, a list.
For these masses of var and wonder,
That often have met on the peaceful wave,
Like opposing clouds of thunder,—
Sending full many a gallant as.
This long and last repose,
Benefath the wave he would gladly breast
To lighten a brither's wore.

Henceforth, let their only office be To succor the shores that need, To strengthen the weak, and make a friend Of the famishing foe we feed.

The armies of old, in their path of blood, Scattered the kernels of wheat; And the crusaders found, in their murch of deat The cane, with its nector so sweet.

Such alone be the victories our land shall bon The trophies her sons shall covet.— A glory admired by all the earth, And approved by the powers above it.

The millions, wasted in brutal War,
For laurels that soon must wither,
Might bind the world in the bonds of peace,
And the nations kait together,—

Might help the trampled to rise again,
The slave from his fetters release—
Then speed forever the ship of War,
That sails on the errands of Peace!
