LINES ON THE DEATH OF A BEAUTIFUL AND DEAR CHILD.

Away, away, to thy home in the skies.

Thou beautiful child, with the seol-lit eyes
We have ever loved thee in doubt and fear,
For brief have we felt would thy stay be he Thou art all too fair for thy earthly home, And spirit voices are bidding thee come. Back to thy Father in loveliness dreat, Back to thy home in the land of the blest.

Back to thy home in the lane of use over. And we weald not keep thee, then unpel child, With thy aspect bland and nature so mild; ... For all could'st thou buffet the world's rough tife 34 brook in this wearinous place to abide. We ever for curreleys, but mere for thee, For we have "it blass where thy home will be And we know [it blass where thy home will be And nought if distress in that peeceful home.

No dream of artist was ever so fair, As the gold of thy ever waving hair; Or the beauty that dwell in thy drooping Or thy pensive eye, by the lash half hid.

Penive and melting, and transparent too, With the soul of an angel gleaming through; While the breath that came through the roby list Was arelet as the dew the honey-bee sign. Then art goin in the beauty back to God, And we strive to him the avenging rod; We havy liath the to sent with the quint dead, And arrowed bright flowers o'er thy gramy bed.

But tears will flow on—we may not restrain
The tide of our grief—we may not refrain
From this passionate grieving, this yearn heart.

From this passeonate greaters heart,
when called from the long-cherished idol to part.
And we know 'tis well with the early dead;
And the grief that we feet, the tears we shed,
Are all for the living, the loved once left.
The stricken in heart, of the loved once left.

Sure God will forgive us, for Jesus wept,
When he came to the tomb where Lazarus slept
And if he might weep, the chosen of Heaven,
Sure tears in weak mortals may be forgiven.

I would be strong;
in the majesty of mental power,
it alike when tempests o'er me lo
Or flatterers round me throng.

I would be brave; the fearless might of truthful thought, the chain around the fettered wrough, And free the injured slave.

I would be free;

Free as the streamlet from the mountain gushing;
Free as the eagle through wide heaven rushing;
And see my brother free.

Wise in the knowledge of my soul and heart,
Studying in Nature's book a freeman's part,
Read with a freeman's eyes.

I would be firm; the utterance of heartfelt thought, by smiles cajoled or interest bought, In duty's resolves stern.

I would be true;
my conscisnee,—true to Nature's laws,
se to sacred Freedom's glorious cause,
Through all life's changes true.

I would be great;
Not in the estimation of the crowd,
Who prize alone rank's timed-color'd cloud,
Veiling man's true estate;

But great in fame; on good deeds wrought ever for the just, hus would leave to time in hopeful trust A pure unspotted name.
