MR PARKER'S DISCOURSE,

OCASIONED by the Death of John Quiney Admin. 10 cents of the Ningrough Colong Colong

Happy Voyagers were we,
Gliding o'er life's placid atream:
Seven in all, with spirits free;
Ab! it seems now all a dream.
Seven in all we sped along,
Mid the sunshine and the flowers,
While the light and merry song
Told what happiness was outs.

And the brook went on its way,
Singing like a gladsomy child,
Winding where the sunbrams play,
Gliding through the woodland wild.
Sunshine gleaming over head,
Sunshine filing every heart,
Not a care to us was wed,
That could sadness e'er impart.

But a storm erose one day,
And a Voyager departed,
Whither, then, we could not say,
But it left us all sad-hearted.
Ah, we missed its presence bright,
As we journeyed on our way,
Wond'ring why it left our sight,
In shother land to stray.

In another land to stray.
Years like pleasant drams have flow
Tree now stem the tide together,
One by one the barks went down, in the dark and storny weather.
All alone we glide along,
But Life's sky seems now less fair.
For the mem ries 'round ou throng,
Taking us where angels are!

Ah, the river's growing wide,
And the current, oh now deep!
While away we swifer glide,
Where the winds no longer sleep.
Soon the land will fade from sight,
And the Ocean storms be ours,
Day will dwinde into Night,
Gone will be Life's summer hours

Gone will be Life a sommer nour.
We will sold hear our part,
Though the winds may adverse be,
For we know a Father's heart
Yearns to greet uso o're the sea.
O'er the trackless waste we roam,
By the storm and tempest driven,
We are hastening toward home,
There to greet the loved in Heaven
