From the Liberty Bell of 1848. THE RUNAWAY SLAVE AT PILGRIM" POINT. BY ELIEARETH BARRETT SHOWSING.

I stand on the mark, beside the shore Of the first while playin benched knee; Where exile changed to ancestor, And God way, thanked for libery. I hire's ma through the night-may akin is a been any knee down as this merk-I loak on the sky and the sea.

D, pilgrin-ools, i speak to you : 1 see you come out proud and slow From the land of the sprits, pale as dew, And round me and round me ye go. O, pilgrins, i have gasped and run All night long from the whips of one Who, in your names, works an and wee

III. And thus I thought that I would come And knet here where yet here its here its for a start of the second second second In undertone to the occars' rear; And fit my black face, my black hand, lifere in your panee, to cause this land Ye blessed in Freedom's, heretofore.

I am black, I am black, And yet God made me, they ssy: Bat if he did no--aniling, back He must have east his work wary Under the fact of his white creatures, With a fook of soorn, that the dusky features Might be trodden again to clay.

Might be trouven again a first things T. And yet he has made days things To be gid and interry as light; There's a first stream tipples out of eight; And the dark forge chant in the safe means, and the acceleration are means the pass. Over the face of the darket hight:

77. Bot we who are dark, we are dark ! O God, we have no stars ! About our sonik, is ease and cark, Our blockness shots like prison-bars ! And crosch our souls so far behind, That neres a confort can they find, By reaching through their prison-bars
