Adams: Delivered at the Melodeon in Rostor
M-reh 5, 1848. Just published by BELA MA REI Alas! my little Anna
Is sleeping in the grave,
And o'er her dreamless pillow
The willow branches wave.

O she was mild and lovely in all her childish play, And she loved the blessed Savi And loved to read and pray.

The light of our low dwelling
Was bright when she was thet
And hope was wont to picture
Her future sky all fair.

But the spoiler marked his victi And she was called to die, That sister of the silken tress, And of the sparkling eye.

We will place a small white marble Above her burial sod, While weeping, yet rejoicing That Anna is with God.

SHITEN OF THE DEATH OF DELLA A: BRIGHAY
My friend, weep not. Though death has given
Thy defing to the sod,
Thy little Della lives in Heaven,
Its spirit home, with God.

She left this gloomy world of care, She soars to worlds above; Her gentle spirit's chanting there An endless song of love.

Yes-though her tiny form is laid Within the churchyard drear, Her spotless soul to Heaven's cor 'Thy bud' is blooming there.

Then weep not, mother, - God has That thy own heart might hence be giv To him, and him alone.

Weep not, dear friends—but think, in death
We all must shortly lie;
Her peaceful end, her parting breath
Bids ns—prepare to die.
