Then we see it republished, with a new title, the "Liberator," and the following is the first page:

THE LIBERATOR

Vol. XXII. 1855.

ECONOMY AND AMERICAN SLAVERY.

From the Press of the Potters.

ECONOMY AND LIBERTY.

"For the benefit of all who may read this, I give you my own opinion, which I have arrived at after careful consideration, that the American slave system is contrary to the principles of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. I believe that the slave system is incompatible with the principles of liberty and justice, and that it must be finally overthrown."

JOHN T. HAYES.
