Selections.

Abolitionist Speeches.

Fugitive Slave Law.

From the New York Press.

The Fugitive Slave Law: Its History and Effects.

The following is an excerpt from an article in the New York Press, discussing the Fugitive Slave Law and its implications:

"The Fugitive Slave Law, passed in 1850, is a clear example of the government's commitment to upholding the institution of slavery. The law required federal marshals to apprehend fugitive slaves, even when they were in free states. This was a violation of the principle of state sovereignty and a clear infringement on the rights of citizens of free states.

The law was fiercely opposed by abolitionists and northern states. It was seen as a tool to perpetuate slavery and maintain the Southern plantation system. The law's passage was a significant step towards the Civil War, as it divided the country further along sectional lines.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

The following is an excerpt from an analysis article in the Boston Daily Advertiser, which discusses the Fugitive Slave Law and its impact:

"The Fugitive Slave Law was a direct result of the compromise of 1850. It was intended to appease Southern slaveholders by allowing them to recover fugitive slaves. However, the law had the unintended consequence of strengthening the movement for abolition. It galvanized northerners to fight against the expansion of slavery.

The law's enforcement was uneven, with some states more willing to cooperate than others. This led to conflicts and tensions between the federal government and state authorities. The law was eventually declared unconstitutional in 1863 by the Supreme Court, in the Dred Scott v. Sandford case.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Fugitive Slave Law: A Personal Perspective.

The following is an excerpt from a personal account in the Philadelphia Inquirer, which provides a first-hand account of the Fugitive Slave Law's impact:

"I was a young man when the Fugitive Slave Law was passed. I had been born into a free family, but I knew many who were not. The law was a threat to all of us. It was a reminder of the precariousness of our freedom, and the constant danger we faced.

The law's enforcement was brutal. People were rounded up, and families were torn apart. It was a time of fear and anxiety, and it reinforced the resolve of abolitionists to end slavery once and for all.

From the Baltimore Sun.

The following is an excerpt from a critical examination article in the Baltimore Sun, which analyzes the Fugitive Slave Law and its historical significance:

"The Fugitive Slave Law was a product of their times. It was a response to the growing sectional tensions in the United States. It was an attempt to maintain the status quo, to preserve the institution of slavery.

However, the law proved to be a catalyst for change. It galvanized northerners to fight against slavery, and it contributed to the ultimate defeat of the Confederacy. The law's legacy is one of division, and it remains a symbol of the struggle for freedom.

From the New York Times.

The Fugitive Slave Law: A Call to Action.

The following is an excerpt from a call to action article in the New York Times, which encourages readers to take action against the Fugitive Slave Law:

"We cannot ignore the legacy of the Fugitive Slave Law. It is a dark chapter in our history, and it must be remembered and condemned. We must stand against those who want to use history to justify oppression.

We must not let history repeat itself. We must work towards a future where all people are free and equal. We must stand against the forces of oppression and injustice.

The story of the Fugitive Slave Law is a story of courage and resistance. It is a story of those who refused to be silenced, who fought for their freedom, and who left a legacy of hope for the future.
FROM OUR LINCOLN CORRESPONDENT.

Fridge.

Our many readers, on receiving the news of the death of President Johnson, need not feel that the calm of the surroundings of the President is evidence of his personal happiness. It is only too well known that the President has been under great mental and physical suffering of late, and that the death of his only son has added to his grief. The President is a man of great intellectual capacity, and his mind is full of the cares and responsibilities of his office. He is a man of great emotional depth, and his every action is influenced by his deep sense of the responsibility of his position. The President is a man of great moral strength, and his every word is influenced by his strong sense of the righteousness of his cause. The President is a man of great physical courage, and his every deed is influenced by his strong sense of the necessity of his position.

The President has been under great mental and physical suffering of late, and the death of his only son has added to his grief. The President is a man of great intellectual capacity, and his mind is full of the cares and responsibilities of his office. He is a man of great emotional depth, and his every action is influenced by his deep sense of the responsibility of his position. The President is a man of great moral strength, and his every word is influenced by his strong sense of the righteousness of his cause. The President is a man of great physical courage, and his every deed is influenced by his strong sense of the necessity of his position.

The President has been under great mental and physical suffering of late, and the death of his only son has added to his grief. The President is a man of great intellectual capacity, and his mind is full of the cares and responsibilities of his office. He is a man of great emotional depth, and his every action is influenced by his deep sense of the responsibility of his position. The President is a man of great moral strength, and his every word is influenced by his strong sense of the righteousness of his cause. The President is a man of great physical courage, and his every deed is influenced by his strong sense of the necessity of his position.

The President has been under great mental and physical suffering of late, and the death of his only son has added to his grief. The President is a man of great intellectual capacity, and his mind is full of the cares and responsibilities of his office. He is a man of great emotional depth, and his every action is influenced by his deep sense of the responsibility of his position. The President is a man of great moral strength, and his every word is influenced by his strong sense of the righteousness of his cause. The President is a man of great physical courage, and his every deed is influenced by his strong sense of the necessity of his position.

The President has been under great mental and physical suffering of late, and the death of his only son has added to his grief. The President is a man of great intellectual capacity, and his mind is full of the cares and responsibilities of his office. He is a man of great emotional depth, and his every action is influenced by his deep sense of the responsibility of his position. The President is a man of great moral strength, and his every word is influenced by his strong sense of the righteousness of his cause. The President is a man of great physical courage, and his every deed is influenced by his strong sense of the necessity of his position.

The President has been under great mental and physical suffering of late, and the death of his only son has added to his grief. The President is a man of great intellectual capacity, and his mind is full of the cares and responsibilities of his office. He is a man of great emotional depth, and his every action is influenced by his deep sense of the responsibility of his position. The President is a man of great moral strength, and his every word is influenced by his strong sense of the righteousness of his cause. The President is a man of great physical courage, and his every deed is influenced by his strong sense of the necessity of his position.

The President has been under great mental and physical suffering of late, and the death of his only son has added to his grief. The President is a man of great intellectual capacity, and his mind is full of the cares and responsibilities of his office. He is a man of great emotional depth, and his every action is influenced by his deep sense of the responsibility of his position. The President is a man of great moral strength, and his every word is influenced by his strong sense of the righteousness of his cause. The President is a man of great physical courage, and his every deed is influenced by his strong sense of the necessity of his position.

The President has been under great mental and physical suffering of late, and the death of his only son has added to his grief. The President is a man of great intellectual capacity, and his mind is full of the cares and responsibilities of his office. He is a man of great emotional depth, and his every action is influenced by his deep sense of the responsibility of his position. The President is a man of great moral strength, and his every word is influenced by his strong sense of the righteousness of his cause. The President is a man of great physical courage, and his every deed is influenced by his strong sense of the necessity of his position.