POLITICAL REPORTING.

We are all in a state of political expectation. The great political character of the day is not yet sufficiently defined to be known to the country. The Republican leaders are still in a state of uncertainty, and the Democratic leaders are divided in opinion. The Whigs, on the other hand, are divided in their engagements, and the Know-Nothing leaders are divided in their opinions.

SLAVESTY IN THE UNITED STATES.

The question of slavery in the United States is still before the country. The abolitionists are still in a state of agitation, and the slaveholders are divided in opinion. The Southern states are divided in their engagements, and the Northern states are divided in their opinions.

Funeral Services of Henry D. Thoreau

October 6, 1862

The home of the sorrowing soul was opened to the friends of the deceased by the women of the town, who brought in flowers and placed them on the casket. The service was then conducted by the Rev. Mr. Doolittle, who read a selection from the Bible and gave an address. The body was then taken to the church, where a large crowd had assembled to hear the funeral discourse. The discourse was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Doolittle, who spoke upon the life and Works of Henry D. Thoreau. The body was then laid in the grave, after being embalmed, and the funeral party returned to the house of the deceased. The funeral was attended by a large crowd, who paid their last respects to the deceased. The funeral was a solemn and impressive occasion, and the solemnity of the occasion was enhanced by the beautiful and touching music of the organ and choir. The funeral was a signal of the respect and esteem in which Henry D. Thoreau was held by his friends and the community in general.
