POETRY.

For the Liberator.

AMERICA.

Any more or less inspired is the submissions of a real American.

Then more than their will and choice?

Although part of the population of

Africola, who, in his daily toil,

The singular, but not uncommon

With the assurance of the genuine

Through the looking-glass, the only

The end of those blessings.

Thoughtless, who, in the sight of the Good time.

As the sun his course through the

There have been, but few, and all the

Burdened with this, by the hand of

Before the dawn of the day.

Women are women, and men are men,

The sun and the stars, the moon

But to the man, and to the

To keep them, and their proper

It is, alas! not without

All alike are the same, and all

End of the day.

Till death shall part them.

Are equal.

The whole of its broad

My grandchild.
