THE LIBERATOR.
No. 144.
BOSTON, FEBRUARY 22, 1856.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

From a number of scattered sources we learn that the American Tract Society has been almost universally recognized as an institution of the highest moral and religious character. Its work is now extensively carried on in the various parts of the United States, and the agency is increasingly used by the friends of civilization and Christianity in the various parts of the world. The society has been in existence for many years, and the number of its members and the amount of its contributions have increased steadily. Its objects are to send out tracts and books to the various parts of the world, to promote the spread of knowledge and the cultivation of the mind, and to disseminate the truths of the gospel. The society is supported by contributions from friends of the cause, who are persuaded of the importance of the work which it is doing. The TRACTS and BOOKS are distributed gratis, and the contributions are received without any expectation of a return. The society is conducted with great care and diligence, and the management is left to a board of managers, who are chosen from among the most respectable and provident men of the country. The society has a large and valuable library, and the books which it distributes are always of the highest moral and religious character. The society is one of the most useful institutions in the country, and is thoroughly respectable.