Ex-Libris Oppression.

The Peaceable.

In the Boston Post, for the benefit of some of the readers who may not be familiar with the principles and practices of the Liberator, I will give a brief account of the Anti-Slavery Society and its work. The society was formed in 1830, and has since been actively engaged in the work of promoting the abolition of slavery. The society is composed of persons of all ages and in all conditions of life, and its officers are elected by the members. The society is supported by voluntary contributions, and its funds are used for the purpose of publishing and circulating anti-slavery literature, and for the support of its agents and missionaries. The society has been very successful in its work, and has accomplished much in the way of freeing slaves and promoting the cause of freedom. The society is still active, and is engaged in the publication of the Liberator, which is the organ of the society. The society is a strong and powerful organization, and is doing good work in the cause of freedom.
