The Liberator

October 28

The Declaration of Independence

The peace took place in Philadelphia, we last heard, with a rumbling which filled the room, and a roar which echoed through the hall.

The news from the interior was still more agreeable. The people had turned out in great numbers, and the subscription list for the Independent had increased to a thousand names.

The demonstration was held at noon, and the speakers were: Mr. Fitch, Mr. White, Mr. Gannett, Mr. Emerson, Mr. Judson, Mr. Webster, and others.

The speech of Mr. Fitch was received with great applause. He said, "The people of the United States have always had a deep interest in the cause of liberty. They have always been willing to sacrifice their own comfort for the sake of others. They have always been willing to fight for what is right."

The speech of Mr. White was also received with great applause. He said, "The people of the United States have always been willing to fight for what is right. They have always been willing to sacrifice their own comfort for the sake of others. They have always been willing to stand up for what is just."
