THE LIBERATOR.

Vol. XXVIII. No. 7.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1858.

The good men of every age, everywhere, to one and all, hold high the banner of liberty over their heads. The spirit of the times and the spirit of the past have brought us to this point. The world is but now waking to the necessity of freedom. The cause of humanity is not to be neglected, but to be pursued with all the energy and vigor of the human mind. The noblest and best of man's race are the men who love freedom, and who strive to make it a reality. The world is but now beginning to understand the value of human rights, and the necessity of protecting them. The cause of humanity is not to be neglected, but to be pursued with all the energy and vigor of the human mind. The noblest and best of man's race are the men who love freedom, and who strive to make it a reality. The world is but now beginning to understand the value of human rights, and the necessity of protecting them.

The world is but now beginning to understand the value of human rights, and the necessity of protecting them.
THE LIBERATOR.

FEBRUARY 12.

H. R. HOOPER,

Secretary of the Abolition Society, New York, in a letter to the Editor, February 12, 1861, says:--

"The Abolition Society of New York, in their last meeting, adopted a resolution, expressing with the strongest possible feeling of indignation, the fact that the Administration has given the most minute attention to the demands of the slaveholders of the South, while it has taken no effective steps to prevent the secession of the State of South Carolina from the Union. The resolution of the Society expresses their determination to continue their efforts to proc.