REFUGE OF OPPRESSION.

To a FRIEND.

I have seen the picture of American slavery, and I can now understand when the word slavery is mentioned, what that word means. It means a state of misery, degradation, and degradation. It means a state of physical suffering, and mental anguish, and moral corruption. It means a state of economic exploitation, and social oppression. It means a state of political disfranchisement, and religious ignorance. It means a state of racial discrimination, and economic exploitation. It means a state of physical degradation, and moral corruption.

Yours truly,

THE LIBERATOR.

THE OLD MARSHALL.

(Memorials of Thomas Jefferson, by a contemporary, from an essay by S. C. W. by J. M. C. of Green."

The old man of the marsh was seated by a stream, gazing thoughtfully into the distance. He was dressed in simple, weathered clothes, and his face was lined with experience.

"What do you think of this land, my friend?" he asked.

"It is a land of opportunity," replied the contemporary. "A land where men can work hard and realize their dreams."

"Exactly," said the old man. "But it is also a land of struggle. A land where not everyone is given a fair chance."

"I agree," said the contemporary. "But we must keep fighting for what we believe in, for the sake of our children and grandchildren."

The old man nodded, and continued to gaze into the distance.
