THE LIBERATOR.

JUNE 14.

LETTER FROM MR. STUART.

My Dear Sir,

I am glad to hear from you, and to know that you are well. I have been in London for some time, and have been engaged in business. I hope to return to the United States soon.

Yours truly,

L. C. Sturct.

THE WORK OF THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR.

The American ambassador has been very active in his efforts to improve the conditions of the African people. He has been working with the government of the United States to establish more schools and hospitals in Africa. He has also been pushing for the establishment of a more just and fair system of taxation.

The ambassador has been met with some resistance, however. There are those who believe that the African people are not ready for the changes that are being proposed. They feel that the people are not ready for education and that they are not prepared to pay the taxes that would be required.

The ambassador has been firm in his belief that the African people are capable of change and that they deserve the same rights as any other people. He has been working hard to convince others of this and to secure their support.

Yours sincerely,

J. A. Brown.

RETURNING THE SOUTHERN SPIRIT.

The spirit of the South is returning. The war has ended and the people are beginning to rebuild. The Union army has been withdrawn and the people are once again free to live their lives as they choose.

The people are determined to make the South a better place. They are working hard to reestablish their farms and their homes. They are also working to improve their schools and their hospitals.

The spirit of the South is returning, but it is a new spirit. It is a spirit of hope and of progress. The people are determined to make the South a better place and to ensure that it remains a free and independent nation.

Yours sincerely,

J. A. Smith.

THE AMBASSADOR'S LETTER FROM LONDON.

I have been in London for some time and have been working on business affairs. I have been meeting with various officials and have been working to improve the conditions of the African people.

I have been working hard to establish more schools and hospitals in Africa. I have also been pushing for a just and fair system of taxation.

I have been met with some resistance, however. There are those who believe that the African people are not ready for the changes that are being proposed. They feel that the people are not ready for education and that they are not prepared to pay the taxes that would be required.

I have been firm in my belief that the African people are capable of change and that they deserve the same rights as any other people. I have been working hard to convince others of this and to secure their support.

Yours sincerely,

J. A. Brown.
