Refuge of Oppression.

Selections.

DEAR SIR:—I write you in answer to your letter of the 29th ultimo, in which you say you have not heard from me since the 2nd of July. I have been in constant correspondence with you ever since that date, but have not had time to answer your last letter.

I am much interested in your progress, and wish you all success.

Yours truly,

[Signature]

September 30, 1861.

THE LIBERATOR.

The news from the South shows that the Confederate States are in a state of great disorder. The troops are in a state of insurrection, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling.

ELMIRA HOSPITAL.

Men who are said to be insane are now being treated in the hospital. They are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling.

THE BREAKERS OF THE END.

We are informed that the United States government is in a state of disorder. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling.

EVENING SENATE.

Our senators have been at work all day, but have not been able to make any progress. They are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling.

A LETTER FROM KENTUCKY.

This is a letter from a friend in Kentucky. He is in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling. The people are in a state of confusion, and the government is on the point of falling.