The Congress of Paris, in 1856, were called to consider the question of the treatment of the negroes in the United States. The meeting was opened by a speech of Mr. [Name], which was received with acclamation. He said:

'The negro is a human being, and entitled to the same rights and privileges as any other man. He is a member of the human family, and should be treated as such.

'But,' he continued, 'the negro is not only a human being, but a negro. He is a negro, and must be treated as such. He is a negro, and must be treated as such. He is a negro, and must be treated as such.'

Mr. [Name] concluded his speech with a triumphant flourish.

The meeting was adjourned, and the negro question was left to be considered at the next session.
