AN ARTICLED DINNER BUT A POOR CANOE

That Mr. Lincoln has the good of the American nation at heart, but he has passed all precedent, and nearly approached the unfettered power of a despot, has been the theme of all the public papers of the North. Mr. Lincoln has been regarded as a despot, and the American people have been deceived by his own declarations, which have been the subject of derision and contempt. The President's proclamation has been the subject of much discussion, and the President has been accused of having passed a law of personal responsibility.

Wm. H. Seward on the War

Mr. Seward, under-date of Washington, May 10, 1861, made a speech at the commencement of the present contest. In the course of his speech, he said:

I am aware that in regard to the past, I am dealing with a subject of intense interest. The present is the most critical period in our history. We are now in the midst of a war, and must sustain ourselves in the event of a contested issue.

Wm. H. Seward:

THE Wild WEST

We have heard of the west, and the complete strangers in it. We have heard of the wild west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it. It is the very west, and the strange characters in it.

THE WAR.

The efforts of the President to conciliate the Democrats have been entirely without effect. The President's peace policy has been a failure, and he is now compelled to proceed in a more decided manner. The public opinion is determined that the war shall be continued, and the President has no alternative but to yield to the demands of the people. The country is divided, and the President cannot hope to succeed in his efforts to conciliate the Democrats. The war is not a popular measure, and the President cannot expect to receive support from the people. The war is a serious matter, and the President must take steps to prevent it from becoming more serious. The President must act with energy and resolution, and he must not be afraid to use force if necessary.
