The Liberator

SLAVERY AND ITS CHARACTERISTICS.

In the free States, among the leading political, religious, and intellectual men, there is a very general and satisfactory conviction that no man has a right to enslave another, and that it is fit that such a practice should be abolished. This conviction is not confined to the free States, but is shared by the great majority of people in the United States. It is the opinion of those who advocate the abolition of slavery that it is a sin, and that it is a public duty to oppose it. The abolition of slavery would be a great benefit to the United States, and it is the opinion of those who advocate it that it would be a wise and just policy for the United States to abolish slavery.

JUDY DAVIS TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The following letter was written by Judy Davis, a slave in the United States, to Abraham Lincoln, the President of the United States, in 1863.

[Letter from Judy Davis to President Lincoln]

WHERE THE REAL BATTLE IS TO BE Fought.

If the United States are at war with a hundred nations, and are engaged in the struggle against a hundred nations, the battle is fought where the war is fought. The battle is fought where the soldiers are fought. The battle is fought where the soldiers fight. The battle is fought where the soldiers are fought.

The President's Speech of the 4th July.

From the last letter of General C. C. Page we extract the following passage:

"The President, in his speech of the 4th July, said: "I have never been a partisan of abolition, but I have always been a partisan of freedom. I have always been a partisan of liberty. I have always been a partisan of the rights of man. I have always been a partisan of the principles of justice. I have always been a partisan of the rights of the white man. I have always been a partisan of the rights of the black man. I have always been a partisan of the rights of the American man. I have always been a partisan of the rights of the American woman. I have always been a partisan of the rights of the American child. I have always been a partisan of the rights of the American adult. I have always been a partisan of the rights of all the American people."

THE ISLANDS.

The islands of the Pacific Ocean are a great source of national pride, and a great source of national honor. The islands of the Pacific Ocean are a great source of national wealth, and a great source of national power. The islands of the Pacific Ocean are a great source of national glory, and a great source of national glory.
