Liberator of Oppression

A Reporter in Florida

Nowhere is the negro as free as in Florida.

Selections

The Origin of Representation
Letter to Hon. Mr. Seward, Secretary of State
By Robert Page, Jr.

The fifth section of the Act of Congress, passed March 3, 1867, which provides for the Congress of the United States to enact laws for the establishment of public schools in the several states, and for the encouragement of the study of the English language, is in full effect. The law, passed in the session of the first session of the Thirty-third Congress, it is said, is in full effect. The law, passed in the session of the Thirty-third Congress, it is said, is in full effect. The law, passed in the session of the Thirty-third Congress, it is said, is in full effect. The law, passed in the session of the Thirty-third Congress, it is said, is in full effect. The law, passed in the session of the Thirty-third Congress, it is said, is in full effect. The law, passed in the session of the Thirty-third Congress, it is said, is in full effect.

A Letter from the President

There are, I believe, statesmen, even those who do not agree with me in my views of the late war, who will agree with me in the importance of the present movement. The present movement is the great work of the age, the great work of the century. It is the work of the age that will go down to posterity, and will be remembered with gratitude by the world. It is the work of the century that will go down to posterity, and will be remembered with gratitude by the world. It is the work of the age that will go down to posterity, and will be remembered with gratitude by the world. It is the work of the century that will go down to posterity, and will be remembered with gratitude by the world. It is the work of the age that will go down to posterity, and will be remembered with gratitude by the world. It is the work of the century that will go down to posterity, and will be remembered with gratitude by the world.

A Letter from the President

The President's veto of the measure, which was passed by Congress, on the 3d of March, 1867, was a just and wise one, and was based upon the principle that the States of the Union, as well as the Union itself, are under the control of the Constitution of the United States. The President's veto of the measure, which was passed by Congress, on the 3d of March, 1867, was a just and wise one, and was based upon the principle that the States of the Union, as well as the Union itself, are under the control of the Constitution of the United States. The President's veto of the measure, which was passed by Congress, on the 3d of March, 1867, was a just and wise one, and was based upon the principle that the States of the Union, as well as the Union itself, are under the control of the Constitution of the United States. The President's veto of the measure, which was passed by Congress, on the 3d of March, 1867, was a just and wise one, and was based upon the principle that the States of the Union, as well as the Union itself, are under the control of the Constitution of the United States. The President's veto of the measure, which was passed by Congress, on the 3d of March, 1867, was a just and wise one, and was based upon the principle that the States of the Union, as well as the Union itself, are under the control of the Constitution of the United States.