The Liberator

Proclamation of Amnesty

The President, in pursuance of the Proclamation of Amnesty and Reconstruction, of February 8, 1865, hereby proclaims and announces to all the citizens of the Confederate States of America, both males and females, that, as from the date of this proclamation, all persons of African blood, who, since the 10th day of May, 1865, have been held as slaves in the United States, shall be free, and that the said persons, together with their descendants born in the United States, shall hereby be regarded as citizens of the United States and be entitled to all the privileges, immunities, and rights appertaining to the citizens of the same, and shall be entitled to the protection of the said government in all cases whatever.

Christmas and New Year

Home institutes: at life in the Republican and democratic communities. To the people of the United States. To those who reside in the South.

A new year and a new opportunity

The President, in his message to Congress, of December 6, 1865, has called attention to the fact that 'the American people are about to enter upon a new era of life, and in which they will be called upon to perform great duties and to accomplish great things.'

The President's message

The President's message to Congress, of December 6, 1865, is a comprehensive and comprehensive statement of the principles upon which the Government of the United States is to be conducted, and of the measures which it is necessary to take in order to secure the peace and prosperity of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.

The President's circular

The President, in his circular of December 6, 1865, to the officers of the United States, has called attention to the necessity of maintaining peace and order in the United States, and of preventing any disturbance of the peace and order of the country.