Selectios.

"DOWN IN TENNESSEE."

This week completes an account in considerable of events in Tennessee, which have recently been taking place. It is interesting to note that the people of the state have taken a decided stand against slavery, and have refused to recognize the authority of the Federal government in their territory. The following is a copy of an article from the Nashville Whig, published in Tennessee, which gives an account of the events that have taken place:

The Whig of Tennessee, September 2, 1864.

The people of Tennessee have recently shown a decided determination to resist the enforcement of the Federal government's decrees against slavery. This determination is based upon the belief that the rights of the States and the people of the state are being violated by the Federal government. The people of Tennessee have refused to recognize the authority of the Federal government in their territory, and have taken steps to resist the enforcement of its decrees.

The people of Tennessee are determined to resist the enforcement of the Federal government's decrees against slavery. They believe that the rights of the States and the people of the state are being violated by the Federal government. They have refused to recognize the authority of the Federal government in their territory, and have taken steps to resist the enforcement of its decrees. The people of Tennessee are determined to stand firm and to resist any attempt to violate their rights.

The people of Tennessee are determined to resist the enforcement of the Federal government's decrees against slavery. They believe that the rights of the States and the people of the state are being violated by the Federal government. They have refused to recognize the authority of the Federal government in their territory, and have taken steps to resist the enforcement of its decrees. The people of Tennessee are determined to stand firm and to resist any attempt to violate their rights.

The people of Tennessee are determined to resist the enforcement of the Federal government's decrees against slavery. They believe that the rights of the States and the people of the state are being violated by the Federal government. They have refused to recognize the authority of the Federal government in their territory, and have taken steps to resist the enforcement of its decrees. The people of Tennessee are determined to stand firm and to resist any attempt to violate their rights.

The people of Tennessee are determined to resist the enforcement of the Federal government's decrees against slavery. They believe that the rights of the States and the people of the state are being violated by the Federal government. They have refused to recognize the authority of the Federal government in their territory, and have taken steps to resist the enforcement of its decrees. The people of Tennessee are determined to stand firm and to resist any attempt to violate their rights.

The people of Tennessee are determined to resist the enforcement of the Federal government's decrees against slavery. They believe that the rights of the States and the people of the state are being violated by the Federal government. They have refused to recognize the authority of the Federal government in their territory, and have taken steps to resist the enforcement of its decrees. The people of Tennessee are determined to stand firm and to resist any attempt to violate their rights.