The Great Western Exposition

The Great Western Exposition is now being held at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri. It is one of the most important events in the history of the United States, and has attracted a vast number of spectators from all parts of the country. The exhibition is conducted by the Government of the United States, and is intended to promote the interests of agriculture, manufacture, and commerce.

The exhibition is divided into several sections, each of which is devoted to a particular subject. The agricultural section is one of the most interesting, and contains a vast number of specimens of crops and animals. The mechanical and industrial section is also of great importance, and includes a large number of machines and apparatuses of all kinds. The commercial section is devoted to the display of goods of various kinds, and is attended by a large number of buyers and sellers.

The exhibition is open to the public, and is conducted under the direction of a board of commissioners, appointed by the President of the United States. The commissioners are responsible for the management of the exhibition, and are charged with the duty of seeing that the various sections are kept in proper order.

The exhibition is expected to continue until the end of the year, and is expected to be a great success. It is hoped that the exhibition will be of great benefit to the country, and will promote the interests of agriculture, manufacture, and commerce.

Photography Ladies.

The chief business of the meeting of the Boston Society of Photography held in the Hall of the Mechanics' Institute, on Monday evening, was the annual report of the officers of the society, with a statement of its condition, and the adoption of its new constitution. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mr. E. B. Green, who was followed by Mr. J. P. Fitpatrick, the secretary, who read the annual report of the officers. The report of the treasurer, Mr. H. B. Fisk, was then presented, which shows that the society has a surplus of $750. The next business was the adoption of the new constitution, which was proposed by Mr. J. P. Fitpatrick, and adopted without a dissenting voice.

The President.

The President then called upon Mr. J. P. Fitpatrick to report the state of the society, which he did in a few words. The society is in a flourishing condition, and has been doing well.
