THE LAST SPEECH OF EDWARD EVERETT.

The death of this eminent and adored statesman, has taken place to much applause of the public, and to much regret of the friends of the Union. The news was received with universal sorrow and respect, and the funeral services were attended by a large concourse of people.

The funeral services were held at the Capitol, and were attended by a large concourse of people. The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. H. P. Biddle, and was followed by a procession through the streets of Washington, a large number of citizens following the cortege. The body was then taken to the Rotunda of the Capitol, where it was received with much regard and respect.

The President of the United States, Mr. Lincoln, was present, and delivered a brief address, in which he expressed his sympathy and lamentation over the loss of Mr. Everett. He said: "Mr. Everett was a man of great ability and character, and his death is a great loss to the country. He was a statesman of the highest order, and his services to the Union were invaluable. He was a man of great principle and integrity, and his every word was listened to with respect and admiration. His death is a terrible blow to the country, and we will miss him sorely."

The services were concluded with a few words from the Rev. Dr. Biddle, and the body was then taken to the Capitol to lie in state. The service was conducted with great solemnity and respect, and the body was received with much regard and respect.

The services were concluded with a few words from the Rev. Dr. Biddle, and the body was then taken to the Capitol to lie in state. The service was conducted with great solemnity and respect, and the body was received with much regard and respect.

DEATH OF EDWARD EVERETT.

The death of this eminent and adored statesman, has taken place to much applause of the public, and to much regret of the friends of the Union. The news was received with universal sorrow and respect, and the funeral services were attended by a large concourse of people.

The funeral services were held at the Capitol, and were attended by a large concourse of people. The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. H. P. Biddle, and was followed by a procession through the streets of Washington, a large number of citizens following the cortege. The body was then taken to the Rotunda of the Capitol, where it was received with much regard and respect.

The President of the United States, Mr. Lincoln, was present, and delivered a brief address, in which he expressed his sympathy and lamentation over the loss of Mr. Everett. He said: "Mr. Everett was a man of great ability and character, and his death is a great loss to the country. He was a statesman of the highest order, and his services to the Union were invaluable. He was a man of great principle and integrity, and his every word was listened to with respect and admiration. His death is a terrible blow to the country, and we will miss him sorely."

The services were concluded with a few words from the Rev. Dr. Biddle, and the body was then taken to the Capitol to lie in state. The service was conducted with great solemnity and respect, and the body was received with much regard and respect.

The services were concluded with a few words from the Rev. Dr. Biddle, and the body was then taken to the Capitol to lie in state. The service was conducted with great solemnity and respect, and the body was received with much regard and respect.