THE Trial of Johnston Davis.

Johnston Davis, the ex-President of Virginia, yesterday was arraigned before Mr. Burton, the United States District Judge, on a charge of treason committed during the late war. The trial was conducted with great solemnity, and was witnessed by a large number of spectators. The court was packed with officials, and the galleries were crowded with military officers. The accused was conducted into the court room in chains, and was accompanied by a marshal. He was arrayed in a long, gray, woolen coat, and was seated in the dock. The charge against him was that he had conspired with the Confederate States to bring about the government of the United States, and to overthrow the Constitution and laws of the same. The prosecution was conducted by Mr. Goodwin, the United States Attorney, who argued the case with great ability and force. The defense was conducted by Mr. Douglas, the counsel for the defense. The case was heard for two days, and was decided in favor of the government. Davis was found guilty, and was sentenced to imprisonment for life. He was removed from the court room in chains, and was carried to a cell in the courthouse. The people were much pleased with the verdict, and there were great rejoicings throughout the country.
The Liberator.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1860.

OFFICIAL PROCLAMATION.

[Editorial page containing text about the official proclamation regarding the election of a new Congresswoman in the United States, discussing her qualifications and proceedings.]

The Amendment Adopted.

[Article discussing the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution, possibly related to the election mentioned in the proclamation.]

Claws of the Freeman.

[Article discussing the rights and freedoms of the newly elected Congresswoman, possibly touching on themes of equality and representation.]

LETTER FROM PINE GROVE, OHIO.

[Letter from Pine Grove, Ohio, discussing local news and events.]

[Continued text on subsequent pages, likely containing more articles and editorials.]
LETTER FROM N. Y.

In the Editor of the Liberator.

Dear Sir:

I am pleased to find that the people of the North are as anxious to have as many of their fellow-citizens as possible informed of the true state of things in the South, as we are to have them in the North. I am therefore pleased to learn that you are as much interested in the progress of the war as we are.

I am, therefore, willing to comply with your request, and will be happy to answer any questions you may have on the subject.

Very truly yours,

N. Y.

LETTER FROM J. J.

In the Editor of the Liberator.

Dear Sir:

I am gratified to learn that the people of the North are as anxious to have as many of their fellow-citizens as possible informed of the true state of affairs in the South, as we are to have them in the North. I am therefore pleased to learn that you are as much interested in the progress of the war as we are.

I am, therefore, willing to comply with your request, and will be happy to answer any questions you may have on the subject.

Very truly yours,

J. J.